

THE IRREVOCABLE LIFE INSURANCE TRUST

Most clients are shocked to learn that the death proceeds of their life insurance is subject to federal estate taxation. They believe that life insurance escapes estate taxes and passes to their loved ones intact.

This confusion probably began when the client was told that life insurance is income tax-free. For married clients, the confusion is compounded by the belief that the unlimited marital deduction somehow magically insulates the client's death proceeds from ever being taxed.

Often the marital deduction merely postpones the heavy tax burden on such the death proceeds.

Regardless of the source of this confusion, a great many clients will have far less life insurance proceeds than they expect as a result of not planning for this tax liability or using proper planning to avoid it.

For clients who have taxable estates – over $11.58 million (2020) for single persons and possibly over $23 million for married persons – estate taxes may consume 40% of their life insurance proceeds.

These clients, in effect, have far less insurance than they think they have; or, alternatively, they are paying far more for their coverage than they should be paying.

The Irrevocable Life Insurance Trust (ILIT) has proven to be a highly effective method of avoiding estate taxes without the many problems transferring ownership of the policy to the client's children or other heirs.

The ILIT allows the taxpayer to control how the life insurance proceeds will be used to provide for his or her loved ones. The taxpayer can take full advantage of all of the available $15,000 (2018) annual exclusions to potential beneficiaries. The ILIT allows the death proceeds to pass the taxpayer's loved ones free of estate taxes.

An ILIT is a highly technical document that is controlled not only by trust law, but also by the Internal Revenue Code and various regulations, rulings and court cases. Nevertheless, an experienced estate planning attorney should have no trouble in properly drafting an ILIT to complement your other estate planning documents.

If the technical requirements are followed, the client with a $1,000,000 life insurance policy may save up to $400,000 in estate taxes with this important planning tool.

It is important that you understand these requirements before the ILIT is established.

The purpose of this memo is to provide you with an overview of the nature of the Irrevocable Life Insurance Trust and what it can accomplish. Highlights of the Irrevocable Life Insurance Trust which you should know:

Benefit

The proceeds from your life insurance are generally includable in your taxable estate if you owned the policy or had any "incidents of ownership." This is true for term insurance, cash value insurance, and even insurance provided by your employer. Estate taxes are 40% of the estate value exceeding $11 million (for 2018). The Irrevocable Life Insurance Trust can keep life insurance proceeds from being taxed in your (or your spouse's) estate.

"Incidents of Ownership" which will cause life insurance death proceeds to be taxed as part of in the insured's taxable estate include not just policy ownership, but also the right to borrow the cash value, the right to change beneficiaries, and the right to change how the proceeds are ultimately distributed to the beneficiaries.

The ILIT

An Irrevocable Life Insurance Trust is created to own one or more policies insuring your life. The ILIT is irrevocable, meaning you cannot change the terms once it has been signed, although some flexibility can be written into the document.

For instance, you can allow others, such as your spouse to exercise control over the timing of when the proceeds upon her death will be distributed to your children.

You (and often your spouse) cannot serve as trustee of the ILIT. The trustee can be almost anyone else, such as a parent, a sibling, an adult child, or even a bank.

You cannot be a beneficiary of the trust, but your spouse and children can be (and usually are) beneficiaries. Quite often the ILIT parallels the dispositive provisions of your other estate planning documents, although there is no legal requirement for the ILIT to do so.

Moreover, the ILIT cannot be payable to your estate or to your revocable living trust, as your ability during lifetime to change your will or trust would result in your ability to change the beneficial enjoyment of the policy proceeds, thus bringing the policy death benefit back into your taxable estate.

It's a Gift

Your contributions to the ILIT represent gifts which you cannot get back. The gifts are usually used to pay the premiums on one or more policies insuring your life and which are owned by the trust. Because you cannot reclaim the policies, or receive any benefit from the trust, it would be inappropriate to have the trust own policies whose cash values you had planned to use for retirement income.

The $15,000 Annual Exclusion

You can gift up to $15,000 (2020) per year per person without any gift tax implications. This exclusion is only available to gifts of a present interest, and gifts in trust generally do not qualify. However, a properly drafted ILIT can avoid this problem.

To avoid disqualification, your ILIT should provide that each lifetime beneficiary (who must also be a beneficiary or contingent beneficiary at your death) has the right to withdraw his or her proportionate share of the contribution for a limited period of time after each contribution is made.

Usually the trust agreement provides that, after a contribution is made, each beneficiary will be notified of their right of withdrawal.

After the expiration of the withdrawal period (typically 30 days), the trustee can use the contribution to pay the premium on a life insurance policy. If the beneficiaries sign a waiver of their withdrawal rights immediately after the contribution and notification, then the trustee can pay the insurance premiums immediately.

The IRS has approved the ILIT concept when all the technical requirements are met, but the IRS is notorious for challenging ILIT when these requirements are not met. Even the order in which the documents are signed on the same day can be critical.

With almost half of your life insurance proceeds at stake, it is not worth taking shortcuts or having a novice prepare your documents.

Existing policies can be contributed to your ILIT, but the death proceeds will be drawn back into your taxable estate if you die within three years of the completed gift. If you are insurable, it is sometimes advisable to obtain a new policy.

Also, the transfer of an existing policy can trigger a taxable event should policy loans exceed the total premiums paid.

Upon Death

The trustee receives the death benefit upon your death. These proceeds can be distributed to your family, held in trust, or used to purchase assets from your estate or from your revocable living trust. This last option would be important if your estate had insufficient liquid assets to pay estate taxes.

Liquidity

The tax on your estate is due nine months after the date of death. For instance, on a $16 million estate, the estate taxes will be $2 million dollars.

Those with large estates often do not have that much cash or other assets which could be easily converted to cash in that time frame. The need to pay estate taxes has caused many a farm, family business, or major real estate holding to be sold at discounted prices to pay the estate tax.

Life insurance can provide the money needed to pay the estate tax, and by having the policy purchased and held in an ILIT, the proceeds can be used to provide the needed liquidity for your estate and yet not be subject to estate tax on your death.

Married couples may wish to consider using a "second to die" policy which pays the death benefit only after both spouses are deceased. That is usually the exact time, of course, that the proceeds are needed to pay the estate taxes.

Because no death benefit is paid on the first death, the premium is usually much lower than purchasing a policy which insures just one life. A special type of ILIT can be drafted to hold such a policy.

Direct Ownership

Often clients try to accomplish similar results to the ILIT by having, say, their two children own the policy equally.

Many problems can arise under such an arrangement. A child can die; the policy can be attached and liquidated by a child's creditors; the policy could be considered as the child's property in the event of a divorce; one child may refuse to pay the premiums, or may wish to borrow the cash value.

Furthermore, the IRS has taken the position that the gift of a policy to two or more children is not eligible for the annual exclusion, nor are the direct payment of premiums to the insurance company by the insured.

The outright gift of a policy makes no provisions for young children or grandchildren. These and other issues can be addressed in a properly drafted Irrevocable Life Insurance Trust.

Are You Insurable?

Before paying legal fees to have your ILIT drafted by an attorney, you may wish to submit a trial application to the insurance company to ascertain that you are insurable at acceptable rates. Be sure to list yourself only as the insured.

The owner and applicant should not be you, but could be your wife (unless the policy insures both lives), your proposed trustee, or anyone else. DO NOT submit a check with such a trial application.

Once insurability is established and the ILIT signed, the trustee can submit a new application with the trust as the owner, applicant, and beneficiary. You will only be the insured. An experienced life insurance agent can help you prepare the proper type of application.

Summary

The ILIT is an IRS-approved means of removing your life insurance proceeds from your taxable estate, and yet still have the proceeds available to provide for your spouse and children according to your desires. Gifts made each year to the ILIT can be exempt from gift tax.

For those with taxable estates, the savings in estate taxes can be 40% of the death proceeds. The ILIT can also protect your family after you are gone. Various trust provisions are available to protect children from lawsuits, divorce, or their own indiscretion.

Life insurance is a valuable tool for providing liquidity to your estate to pay estate taxes. Without life insurance, your estate may have to sell assets at fire sale prices or liquidate IRAs (thus triggering taxable income) in order to raise sufficient assets to pay the IRS.
